मानव एक मात्र जानवर है जो हँसता और रोता है. वह एकमात्र ऐसा जानवर है जो मौजूदा चीजों और वांछित स्वरूप के बीच भेद कर सकता है। हम गम्भीर मामलों में अपनी आकांक्षाओं के अतिक्रमण होने पर रोते हैं, हम छोटी सी बातों पर अपनी आकांक्षाओं के निष्फल होने पर हँसते हैं।हम वास्तविक तथा आवश्यक व्यथा के प्रति सहानुभूति से आँसू बहाते हैं जबिक उन बातों पर सहानुभूति के चाह से हमारी हँसी फूट पड़ती है जो कि अनुचित तथा अनावश्यक है। आँसू कुछ तत्काल / अचानक प्रबल संवेदानाओं के मन पर हावी होने से स्वाभाविक और स्वत: स्फूर्त अनुक्रिया है। हँसी भी केवल आक्षर्य या विषमता द्वारा घटित एक प्रकार की आपेक्षात्मक और स्वत: स्फूर्त गतिशीलता है। तनाव एक गंभीर प्रत्याशा और उनसे संबंधित प्रभाव का मन पर गहरा असर पड़ता है। जब यह तनाव अपनी सामान्य तीव्रता से परे बढ़ जाता है और अच्छे और बुरे की पराकाष्ठा को पार कर जाता है तो वह त्रासदी बन जाता है। विचारों के आकस्मिक स्स्थानांतर द्वारा अप्रत्याशित रूपसे सामान्य तनाव की तीव्रता में कमी आना हास्यास्पद है जो मन के लिए आक्षर्यजनक है और यह आनंद की जीवंत अनुभूति के रूप में कौंध जाता है।

Emergent in the wake of industrialization, studies of everyday life endeavor to bring into visibility and somehow make sense of our humble, taken-for-granted, seemingly unremarkable experience of the quotidian. The project has meant subjecting modern Western individuals to the kind of anthropological scrutiny more often reserved for non-Western peoples. The goal has been to explore patterns of behavior not because they are foreign but because they are so familiar as to fall beneath our notice. Artists as well as social theorists in this tradition set out to register and evaluate the neglected minutiae of our daily lives: the ways we sleep and ambulate, ingest and eliminate, work and recreate, care for ourselves and others, slip in and out of selfawareness, and interact with people, objects, and our surroundings. Generally speaking, everyday life studies is a science of the "small." Though usually framed in relation to larger social structures, the objects of attention are micro-moments and micro-actions - turning a street corner, stirring a pot, feeding an infant. They are actions that take place without rising to the status of "event." They are moments in time that leave no historical mark (at least as "history" has traditionally been understood). As these examples suggest, such practices are "everyday" not only because they are "ordinary" but also because they typically occur every day, perhaps even every few hours. Whether tied to bodily rhythms or the rigors of wage work, the non-events of everyday life are almost always characterized by patterns of repetition. Theorists of the everyday, focusing on the effects of modernity, have taken various stances on the political implications of our daily routines. Some have tied their repetitive nature to the mechanization and alienation of labor in a capitalist society. For Michel Foucault, domination is not restricted to the factory floor; the workings of power are more diffuse and insidious than this, operating in the very interstices of our seemingly private lives. For Michel de Certeau, the quotidian is a site not of forcible conformity but of micro-opportunities to defy the dominant order.

"Everyday life" as a theory deals with -

- 1. Events of gargantuan magnitude
- 2. Events that are mundane and steeped in banality
- 3. Events that are part of history's grand narratives
- 4. Events that are epochal to the life of a community or nation

- 2. Because it is anthropological in methodology, and therefore a "small" science.
- 3. Because it does not accommodate social sciences within its epistemological framework.
- Because it deals with events which are a part of our mundane processes and practices.
