A method by which an animal's colour or shape matches its surroundings is known as camouflage. To put it another way, it refers to an animal's capacity to conceal itself from its prey and predators. (1) _____. One notable example is the narrow-headed Madagascar frog Paradoxophylapalmata. The frog can blend in with the mud and tree trunks in its environment due to its brown and yellow colouring and rough texture. The leopard's spots and the tiger's stripes are so well disguised that it is difficult to tell if they are there until they move. (2) _____. In a similar vein, the praying mantis of Malaysia has the ability to change colour and appear to be a flower. The sloth that lives in the jungles of South America has a unique way of hiding. It has grooved hair that is coarse. Algae that are simple and green live in these grooves. This gives the sloth a green appearance and helps it hide from predators.

A. Animals can disguise themselves in a variety of ways to avoid detection by their enemies.

B. The shingleback lizard has a head-like appearance due to its short, bulky tail which makes the predator unsure which side to attack because the creature appears to have two heads.

C. The chameleon has the ability to change colour in order to blend in with its surroundings.

The Chyura tree is found in the Himalayas at high altitudes. This tree can be found in places between 500 and 1200 meters in elevation. In English, it is known as the Indian butter tree; its botanical name is Bassia Butyracea. The majority of Chyura can be found in the areas between the mountainous region of Kumaon in Uttarakhand and the valley of the Kali river in Pithoragarh and the borders of Nepal. There are a few trees around Bhutan and in the Tarang block of Arunachal Pradesh. The Chyura tree looks like an umbrella. (1) _____. Its fruit is plump in the middle and has a tumbi-like shape at the ends, like a small gourd. As it ripens, its skin becomes thicker. It makes the sound of a rattle as the seeds inside ripen. (2) _____. It is referred to as the Kalpavriksha (tree of life by mountain dwellers). The planting and growth of Chyura trees require soil that is both fertile and moist. Ten years after being planted, it produces fruit. Between October and January, it produces flowers and fruit.

- A. It makes a significant contribution to the prevention of landslides and soil erosion.
- B. The fact that this tree produces honey, jaggery, and ghee is its most significant quality.
- C. Two quintals of seed are typically produced by a typical Chyura tree.
- D. Similar to a mango tree, this tree is large, shaded, and covered in dense leaves.

Study the given inference that is followed by some paragraphs. You have to find the paragraph(s) from which it is inferred and select the most appropriate option.

Inference: Mountaineering and human evolution

1. Nowadays, mountaineering is regarded as the king of sports. But humans have been living in the mountains since prehistoric times, and in some parts of the world, like the Andes and Himalayas, they have always had to make difficult mountain journeys as part of their daily lives. However, the majority of European cities made it simple to reach some of the peaks there. It's interesting that early climbers chose the easiest routes because the summit was their goal, whereas today's mountaineers prefer difficult routes for the sport's enjoyment.

2. After Edward Whymper's dramatic account of the climb and fatal accident that occurred during the descent of Matterhorn in 1865, popular interest in mountaineering increased significantly. There is absolutely no competition between individuals or teams in the risky sport of mountaineering. Maybe one can say that the opposition is between the group and the actual pinnacles.

3. Because the people in a party rely on each other for their safety, they must climb together as a team. Mountaineering can be dangerous unless reasonable precautions are taken. However, the majority of fatal accidents involve parties who do not have sufficient experience or equipment. Since bad weather is a common cause of accidents, the safest climber knows when to stop, no matter how tempting it may be to keep going and try to reach the top.

Study the given inference that is followed by some paragraphs. You have to find the paragraph(s) from which it is inferred and select the most appropriate option.

Inference: Political interference in administration

1. The evidence pertaining to political interference in administration demonstrates that this is not a one-way process. Politicians and civil servants with convenient principles who are power-hungry and corrupt frequently form a nexus with one another. A lot of public servants only want to do what politicians ask, and they only do so when they need special favours. Therefore, the civil service's self-righteous attitude sometimes serves as a means of blaming others to cover up their own shortcomings.

2. Memoirs are occasionally published by retired civil servants and depict the glorious administrative efficiency he achieved. It is frequently suggested that things would have been even more fantastic if political interference had not been so prevalent. Sadly, this smug self-satisfaction develops during service years. Our entire system of rules and procedures encourages self-preservation rather than service.

3. The solution needs to be drastic and work quickly. It is imperative that the overprotection of civil servants cease. The only thing the highest authority in the Government—both at the State and at the Centre—can do is transfer an official from one position to another in this day and age, making it impossible to fire an incompetent employee.

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

While there is no denying that the world loves a winner, it is important that you recognise the signs of stress in your behaviour and be healthy enough to enjoy your success. Stress can strike anytime, in a fashion that may leave you unaware of its presence in your life. While a certain amount of pressure is necessary for performance, it is important to be able to recognise your individual limit. For instance, there are some individuals who accept competition in a healthy fashion. There are others who collapse into weeping wrecks before an exam or on comparing marks sheets and finding that their friend has scored better. Stress is a body reaction to any demands or changes in its internal and external environment. Whenever there is a change in the external environment such as temperature, pollutants, humidity and working conditions, it leads to stress. In these days of competition when a person makes up his mind to surpass what has been achieved by others, leading to an imbalance between demands and resources, it causes psychosocial stress. It is a part and parcel of everyday life. Stress has a different meaning, depending on the stage of life you are in. The loss of a toy or a reprimand from the parents might create a stress shock in a child. An adolescent who fails an examination may feel as if everything has been lost and life has no further meaning. In an adult the loss of his or her companion, job or professional failure may appear as if there is nothing more to be achieved. Such signs appear in the attitude and behaviour of the individual, such as muscle tension in various parts of the body, palpitation and high blood pressure, indigestion and hyperacidity. Ultimately the result is self-destructive behaviour such as eating and drinking too much, smoking excessively, relying on tranquilisers. There are other signs of stress such as trembling, shaking, nervous blinking, dryness of throat and mouth and difficulty in swallowing. The professional under stress behaves as if he is a perfectionist. It leads to depression, lethargy and weakness. Periodic mood shifts also indicate the stress status of the students, executives and professionals. In a study sponsored by the World Health Organization and carried out by Harvard School of Public Health, the global burden of diseases and injury indicated that stress diseases and accidents are going to be the major killers in 2020. Heart disease and depression, both stress diseases, are going to rank first and second in 2020. Road traffic accidents are going to be the third-largest killers. These accidents are also an indicator of psychosocial stress in a fast-moving society. Other stress diseases like ulcers, hypertension and sleeplessness have assumed epidemic proportions in modern societies. A person under stress reacts in different ways and the common ones are flight, fight and flee depending upon the nature of the stress and capabilities of the person. The three responses can be elegantly chosen to cope with the stress so that stress does not damage the system and become distressed. When stress crosses the limit, peculiar to an individual, it lowers his performance capacity. Frequent crossing of the limit may result in chronic fatigue in which a person feels lethargic, disinterested and is not easily motivated to achieve anything. This may make the person mentally undecided, confused and accident-prone as well. Sudden exposure of unnerving stress may also result in a loss of memory. Diet, massage, food supplements, herbal medicines, hobbies, relaxation techniques and dance movements are excellent stress busters

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

While there is no denying that the world loves a winner, it is important that you recognise the signs of stress in your behaviour and be healthy enough to enjoy your success. Stress can strike anytime, in a fashion that may leave you unaware of its presence in your life. While a certain amount of pressure is necessary for performance, it is important to be able to recognise your individual limit. For instance, there are some individuals who accept competition in a healthy fashion. There are others who collapse into weeping wrecks before an exam or on comparing marks sheets and finding that their friend has scored better. Stress is a body reaction to any demands or changes in its internal and external environment. Whenever there is a change in the external environment such as temperature, pollutants, humidity and working conditions, it leads to stress. In these days of competition when a person makes up his mind to surpass what has been achieved by others, leading to an imbalance between demands and resources, it causes psychosocial stress. It is a part and parcel of everyday life. Stress has a different meaning, depending on the stage of life you are in. The loss of a toy or a reprimand from the parents might create a stress shock in a child. An adolescent who fails an examination may feel as if everything has been lost and life has no further meaning. In an adult the loss of his or her companion, job or professional failure may appear as if there is nothing more to be achieved. Such signs appear in the attitude and behaviour of the individual, such as muscle tension in various parts of the body, palpitation and high blood pressure, indigestion and hyperacidity. Ultimately the result is self-destructive behaviour such as eating and drinking too much, smoking excessively, relying on tranquilisers. There are other signs of stress such as trembling, shaking, nervous blinking, dryness of throat and mouth and difficulty in swallowing. The professional under stress behaves as if he is a perfectionist. It leads to depression, lethargy and weakness. Periodic mood shifts also indicate the stress status of the students, executives and professionals. In a study sponsored by the World Health Organization and carried out by Harvard School of Public Health, the global burden of diseases and injury indicated that stress diseases and accidents are going to be the major killers in 2020. Heart disease and depression, both stress diseases, are going to rank first and second in 2020. Road traffic accidents are going to be the third-largest killers. These accidents are also an indicator of psychosocial stress in a fast-moving society. Other stress diseases like ulcers, hypertension and sleeplessness have assumed epidemic proportions in modern societies. A person under stress reacts in different ways and the common ones are flight, fight and flee depending upon the nature of the stress and capabilities of the person. The three responses can be elegantly chosen to cope with the stress so that stress does not damage the system and become distressed. When stress crosses the limit, peculiar to an individual, it lowers his performance capacity. Frequent crossing of the limit may result in chronic fatigue in which a person feels lethargic, disinterested and is not easily motivated to achieve anything. This may make the person mentally undecided, confused and accident-prone as well. Sudden exposure of unnerving stress may also result in a loss of memory. Diet, massage, food supplements, herbal medicines, hobbies, relaxation techniques and dance movements are excellent stress busters

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

Science has been trying innumerable methods to prove the existence of the universe, but the biggest plight of science is its inability to produce a single theory that explains the whole universe. A two-pronged approach to the problem aids in its resolution. Firstly, there are some laws that tell us how the universe has changed over time, and secondly, there is a huge amount of uncertainty regarding the initial state of the universe. After much discourse, people insisted that science relies on the first approach and leaves the second to metaphysics or religion. The general belief is that God is omnipotent, and he could have started the universe in any way He wanted. However, the specificity of the creation poses a significant responsibility to explain why God chose to make things in a regular way, within the boundaries of some laws, rather than being arbitrary about it. Thus, it is not wrong to assume that the initial state of the universe was also governed by some laws.

But to rationally explain the dilemma, scientists break it into bits and provide a number of partial theories. These theories predict a limited class of observations, neglecting the effects of other quantities. The accuracy of these theories is unjustifiable because of the fundamental connection that exists between all things, and yet we are here solving parts of the problem that don't make sense from a macro perspective. The two partial theories that have been used to describe the universe are – the general theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. The general theory of relativity describes the large-scale structure of the universe, with structures in the size of millions, while quantum mechanics provides a micro-perspective in the size of one-millionth of an inch. Incorporating the two theories into a single, unified theory remains a goal of science.

The recipe for success is not as easy as it looks. People are surrounded by different circumstances that shape their lives in mysterious ways. We give extraordinary importance to the hard work people perform throughout their lives to attain a particular position or place. But there lies an enigma behind every story. How often do we fail to notice the benefits of hidden advantages and cultural legacies that allow these people to work hard and make sense of the world? The tallest oak in the forest is the tallest not merely because it developed from the toughest acorn, but also because no other trees blocked its sunlight, the soil surrounding it was rich and deep, no rabbit gnawed through its bark as a sapling, and no lumberjack took it down before it reached maturity. Successful people are bred under favourable circumstances. Surprisingly, we fail to recognize the significance of conducive environments for people who are game changers in life, eventually emerging as natural stars to others. The culture we belong to weaves an unusual pattern to our achievements and failures throughout our lives. Thus, asking what people did is not enough; it is asking where they belong that truly reveals the logic behind their victory.

Democracy has its roots etched deep in the subconscious of Indian minds. India has had a long history of rich public arguments and a charged political atmosphere. It was way before the British found their abode in the subcontinent that Indians actively took decisions based on their buoyant discussions and debates. Democracy in India, therefore, does not find itself stemming from British roots but instead takes pride in a greater tradition that they were once a part of. Today, the presence of a robust, non-Western democracy is appreciated by scholars who once commented on the relentless, disunited state of the country post-Independence. The tenacious persistence of democracy as an institution in a vastly diversified country like India earns applause from every nook and corner of the world. Sustaining the world's largest democracy for more than seventy years is unusually difficult, but at the same time, the determination of Indians to weave a 'people's country' is strong. The nation's aspirations are still dependent on her "not-so-nascent" democracy.

However, the two misconceptions that need to be removed are – accepting democracy to be a gift given by the British once India became independent and assuming democracy as the only suited form of government for India. Scholars who have pointed out why democracy is the only form of government that works for India, fail to dislodge their natural biases that come from appreciating the presence of democracy in a country of 1.5 billion people.

The Italian mathematician and astronomer Galileo was in a dangerous situation in the early 1600s. Like all Renaissance scientists, he occasionally gave presents of his inventions and discoveries to the influential patrons of the time since he was dependent on the generosity of powerful rulers to sustain his study. For instance, he once gave the Duke of Gonzaga an original military compass. Then he wrote a book with the Medicis in mind, teaching how to use a compass. Since both kings were appreciative, Galileo was able to locate additional people to teach. No matter how important the discovery, though, his clients typically compensated him with presents rather than money. Because of this, he had to live in continual dependence. There must be a simpler method, he reasoned. When Galileo learned about Jupiter's moons in 1610, he devised a novel plan. As he had always done, he chose to concentrate only on the Medicis rather than sharing the discovery with his patrons by giving one the telescope he had used, dedicating a book to another, and so on. He chose the Medicis for one specific reason: shortly after Cosimo I founded the Medici family in 1540, he made Jupiter, the most powerful of the Gods, the Medici symbol, signifying a power that went beyond politics and finance and was connected to ancient Rome and her deities.

Galileo celebrated the magnificence of the Medicis by making his discovery of Jupiter's moons into a cosmic occasion. He claimed that the stars offered themselves in heaven to his telescope at the same time as Cosimo II's enthronement. He said that the four moons orbiting Jupiter are like the four sons of Cosimo I and demonstrated that the Medici family's rise to power was more than just a chance. Galileo ordered an emblem depicting Jupiter sitting on a cloud with the four stars circling him and offered it to Cosimo II as a symbol of his connection to the stars after dedicating the discovery to the Medicis.

Galileo was appointed as Cosimo II's official court philosopher and mathematician in 1610 and received a full salary. This was the accomplishment of a lifetime for a scientist. The time of pleading for business was over. Galileo's innovative approach allowed him to achieve more in a single move than he had through years of begging. The explanation is straightforward: All masters strive to appear more intelligent than others.

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

Humans have long since evolved into gods in the eyes of other species. We don't like to think too much about this because we haven't been very forgiving or just as gods. You can easily believe that lions, tigers, and other large cats that are equal to humans inhabit most of planet Earth if you watch the National Geographic channel, go to a Disney movie, or read a book of fairy tales. However, in truth, they are no longer present. The majority of people on the planet are humans and the domesticated animals they keep. Epochs like the Pleistocene, Pliocene, and Miocene are used by scientists to categorise the history of our planet. We are formally living in the Holocene period. However, it might be appropriate to refer to the previous 70,000 years as the Anthropocene epoch, or the Age of Humanity.

Because throughout these millennia, Homo sapiens emerged as the single most significant driver of change in the environment of the entire planet. This phenomenon is unusually new and changes the thrust of other creatures on the planet. Since the beginning of life, roughly 4 billion years ago, no single species has ever completely altered the planet's environment. There had been plenty of ecological revolutions and mass extinction incidents, but these weren't brought on by the behaviour of a specific lizard, bat, or fungus. Instead, powerful natural factors including climate change, tectonic plate movement, volcanic eruptions, and asteroid collisions were responsible for their creation. Homo Sapiens altered the game's rules. Within the past 70,000 years, this one ape species has been able to drastically alter the world's ecosystem. Our influence has already surpassed that of geological shifts and ice periods.
